The United States Environmental Protection Agency (“EPA”) issued a November 30th news release recognizing 580 manufacturing plants that are participating in the agency’s ENERGY STAR program.

The EPA news release includes a state-by-state listing of participating companies/facilities.

Participants in the ENERGY STAR program agree to reduce energy intensity by 10 percent within five years.

EPA notes:

... On average, plants that met this challenge reduced their energy intensity by 19 percent within an average of two years. More than 100 plants have taken the challenge twice in a row, achieving reductions of more than 10 percent each time. Together, these plants have prevented more than 17 million metric tons of greenhouse gas emissions from entering our atmosphere and saved more than $443 million in energy costs.

The EPA news release includes information about Arkansas participants in the ENERGY STAR program. The agency notes that Arkansas participants include:

- 12 manufacturers of ENERGY STAR certified products
