ECCI Becomes First Silver NStEP Member

NORTH LITTLE ROCK—Engineering, Compliance, Construction, Inc. (ECCI) is the Natural State Environmental Program’s (NStEP) first Silver member. The Little Rock-based consulting firm brings a wealth of environmental and engineering knowledge to the program’s cohort.

The company was founded in 1993 and employs twenty-one engineers and environmental scientists. Their team works with entities to meet environmental challenges head-on with creative solutions that promote sustainability.

“Participating in the NStEP program highlights ECCI’s commitment to working toward a sustainable future,” ECCI President Julie McCallister said. “We are always eager to encourage our employees to implement the skills we teach our clients, in our day-to-day life. We look forward to collaborating with E&E and the other NStEP leaders on ways to improve our work practices and reach our sustainability goals.”

NStEP is a voluntary environmental stewardship program that recognizes and rewards organizations that are committed to environmental leadership—those that go beyond environmental compliance and move toward the goal of sustainability.

“We are proud to grow the ranks of NStEP by adding a leader in the environmental field in ECCI,” Chief Administrator of the Environment Julie Linck said. “We believe ECCI brings a unique element to NStEP as our first Silver member. We hope to see entities of all sizes join our program.”

Entities employing twenty or more people are invited to apply for one of the Program’s four levels—Bronze, Silver, Gold, and Platinum.
